THE TRAVAILS OF AN IDEA JUNKIE... ENDS HERE.

There's nothing quite like it. It hits you like a 9mm hollow-point right between the eyes. An explosion of dopamine threatening to melt your frontal-lobe.

Eureka!

It's the kind of stuff that made Archimedes bolt through ancient streets stark naked. Fortunately, it doesn't happen often: A geriatric Greek's personal hygiene habits for all to see, nor the earth-shattering possibilities of a big idea.

If it did, the streets would be safe no longer.

It takes a dangerous mind to spawn a disruptive thought from seemingly nowhere. Some say it lives out there in the ether; or that it is an applied art. Others pray to a pantheon of gods for a miracle.

Either way, once you've seen that flash of brilliance, there's no going back. You would pledge your first born for the chance to do it all over again.

The interminable pauses pregnant with anticipation that soon turn to frustration. And frustration turns to fear as the ticking of the clock grows louder. Stomach acids rumble under duress. Outbreaks of cold sweat greet the inevitable panic. The girlfriend hints at leaving you.

And when all seems lost. When you are filled with regret for not having pursued a career in accountancy; when the very meaning of your existence looks like an epic question mark; when the only thought in your head is the irresistible urge to be breast fed...

It blindsides you like a perfectly timed left-hook. The golden 9mm hollow-point bullet of an idea.

Euphoria!

Delirious with relief and safe in the knowledge that you are a giant among mere mortals once again, you hurriedly scribble down your thoughts; frantically sketch the skeleton of a mighty idea. Suddenly it all makes sense. You compliment yourself for having the cojones (figuratively or literally) to think the unimaginable; look beyond the obvious; and proactively hunt for a solution. You give yourself a pat on the back for having the drive to bring an idea to life and the flair for writing.

You still harbour dreams of writing that great Sri Lankan novel (someday). But for now you are happy to be the resident idea junkie and wordsmith (a.k.a copywriter) at Ogilvy Public Relations. It's the perfect fix.
