A CULT HIS OFTY

This article is part of a continuing series on the history of Sri Lanka

The Battle of Trincomalee

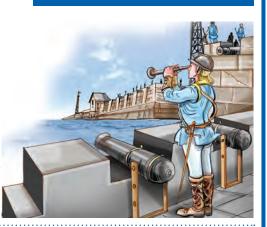

In March 1782 the ship Hugh Boyd was travelling in was captured by a crew of French sailors. Boyd did not identify himself and kept the details of his mission a secret. All the documents and letters he had in hand, he threw into the ocean.

The French were shrewd and more prudent than Boyd. The sailors immediately jumped into the sea and retrieved the documents. They sent these documents to the Dutch who filed everything in the Archives in Colombo.

2. The French ship and crew that captured Boyd had been sent to help and support the Dutch. They were part of the fleet led by Naval Captain Baillie de Suffren. When Suffren heard that Trincomalee had been captured by the British, he immediately set out to recapture this important port.

The day after Boyd was captured, the French fleet and British fleet met at sea. A brutal battle ensued but no side could claim victory over the other. Suffren dispatched Hugh Boyd to be imprisoned in Madagascar.

3. The ships of the two fleets sustained heavy losses in the aftermath of the battle. The French ships headed to Batticaloa for extensive repairs while the British retreated to Trincomalee. On July 6, 1782 the British and French fleets met yet again in battle. This also ended without victory or defeat.

As the British believed that the French were poised to attack Trincomalee, more troops were dispatched by Commander Hay MacDowell to support the fort. However Suffren reached Trincomalee before the additional British troops arrived. On August 25, 1782 Suffren and his replenished fleet mounted a heavy attack and bombarded Trincomalee Fort.

On August 30, 1782 the French captured the Fort of Trincomalee and Ostenberg Fort surrendered soon after. When the British additional troops arrived, it was two days too late. The British were surprised that the fort's garrison had surrendered and a battle ensued once again.

On September 3, 1782 the British and French fleets battled till night fell. Still there was no decisive victory. Darkness ended the battle.

The French occupied the two fortresses until peace talks were held in Paris in 1783. After the Paris peace talks, the French handed over the two forts to the British, who then granted them to the Dutch.

Wimbledon 2024

July 1, 2024

The famous tennis tournament runs from July 1 - 14, attracting some of the biggest names in the sport.

The sports stars will be battling to win the men's, women's and wheelchair titles – in singles and doubles.

The official title for the competition is 'The Championships', but it is often just referred to as Wimbledon – as that's where it takes place in south-west London.

It's so popular, it often draws in big celebrities and members of the Royal Family.

What makes Wimbledon special?

It's British and full of history! The first Championships took place in 1877 at the All England Club in London, where it's still held today.

It's famous for strawberries, thought to be linked to the time of year it's played and the tournament's history.

People coming along to watch are expected to eat around 2 million strawberries every year.

Who are the favourites to win?

Carlos Alcaraz won the men's singles and Marketa Vondrousova won the women's singles last year, so keep an eye out for them.

There's some young talent to watch out for, too.

20-year-old Coco Gauff could cause some upsets in the women's games – so could Mirra Andreeva, who turned 17 this year.

In the men's game, Jannik Sinner is ranked Number 1 for 2024 so far.

There are however a few big names missing.

Novak Djokovic – a regular at Wimbledon – is hoping to recover from knee surgery in time for the tournament.

Carlos Alcaraz won the men's singles in 2023 in a tense battle with Novak Djokovic.

Emma Raducanu is a popular face at tennis tournaments around the world, but especially on home turf.

This year is the first tournament without the famous Williams sisters and no Rafael Nadal.

Brits to look out for Britain's Andy Murray is hoping to be fit for the tournament, to get "a bit of closure," before retiring later this year.

Emma Raducanu might be another name you recognise, she'll be hoping for a good tournament in the women's singles.

Alfie Hewett and Gordon Reid are among the favourites in the men's wheelchair doubles.

Jack Draper's in form at the moment, recently beating last year's Wimbledon champion, Carlos Alcaraz.

UK Children's Laureate: Frank Cottrell-Boyce

July 2, 2024

British children's author Frank Cottrell-Boyce has been named the Children's Laureate for 2024 – 2026.

The special role is awarded every two years to a well-known writer or illustrator in recognition of their talent.

They work to improve reading opportunities for all children across UK.

Frank Cottrell-Boyce was presented with a one of a kind silver medal by the outgoing Laureate and award-winning performance poet, playwright and children's author, Joseph Coelho at a special awards ceremony in Leeds on Tuesday.

Frank Cottrell-Boyce, lives in Liverpool and is a multi-award-winning children's author.

His very first novel, 'Millions' was published in 2004 and won the CILIP Carnegie Medal – awarded for an outstanding book written in English for children and young people.

The children's author has written a number of other books including 'Chitty Chitty Bang Bang Flies Again', 'Cosmic', 'Framed', 'The Astounding Broccoli Boy', 'Runaway Robot' and 'The Wonder Brothers'.

Frank has also written for programmes like 'Doctor Who' and films including 'Goodbye Christopher Robin'.

He even co-wrote Queen Elizabeth II's famous Platinum Jubilee sketch featuring Paddington Bear!

Hurricane Beryl reaches the Caribbean

July 1, 2024

Hurricane Beryl has hit the Caribbean, with people living there taking emergency precautions to protect themselves.

Barbados, Grenada, Trinidad and Tobago and St. Vincent and the Grenadines were among the first countries hit on Monday, with other countries such as Jamaica on high alert with the storm expected to hit later this week.

Hurricane Beryl became a top-level Category 5 storm late on Monday, resulting in heavy rain and winds of up to 160 miles (260 kilometres) per hour.

Beryl is the earliest Category 5 storm in the Atlantic on record, with experts saying such a powerful storm forming this early in the Atlantic hurricane season is extremely rare.

This map which shows what route they think Beryl will take, and how strong it will be - with red being the strongest and green the weakest.

How will the ISS come back to Earth safely?

June 28, 2024

Building a floating laboratory in space. It may have sounded like an out of this world idea when it was first approved by the US government in 1984 but after decades of research and work between countries around the world, the International Space Station (ISS) was created.

The first parts were launched in 1998 and it has been continuously lived in since 2000 – this is the longest continued human presence in space.

While everything is still in working order at the moment, plans need to be put in place to make sure it's safely taken apart in 2030.

NASA has selected Elon Musk's SpaceX company to bring down the ISS by using a form of tugboat for its safe return to Earth.

After decades in space the ISS will be coming back down to Earth from 2030.

What's the plan to take apart the Space Station?

NASA has studied various options for how to take apart the Space Station safely.

These include using the younger parts in a next-generation platform.

Another idea has been to give it to another business to run and maintain.

But these solutions have complications which come down to cost and also sorting out who owns what, as different countries have built different parts.

The first step in the current plan is to let the ISS begin to "decay" in its orbit. This means it will naturally get closer to the Earth due to the planet's gravitational pull.

After the last of the crew have left, the space tugboat will then execute the final de-orbit move.
